

The Adventures Of Young Merlin Episodes I III: Babylonian Dragons The Rainbow Bridge The Elemental Wizard (New World Earth 2 1)

In the ancient Babylonian cosmology, dragons were revered as celestial beings that held a profound connection to the heavens. They played an integral role in the Babylonian's understanding of the cosmos, representing the forces of nature and the celestial realm. Among these dragons, the most prominent was Tiamat, the primordial chaos goddess who threatened the existence of the gods in the Babylonian creation myth.

Tiamat: The Primordial Dragoness

Tiamat, the personification of chaos and primordial matter, was portrayed as a colossal, serpentine dragon with scales of various colors. She was said to have the head of a lion, the wings of a bird, and the tail of a scorpion. Tiamat was believed to be the mother of all dragons and other monstrous creatures that inhabited the cosmos.

According to the Babylonian creation myth, Enuma Elish, Tiamat was the supreme goddess before the gods came into being. She was the embodiment of chaos and disorder, representing the primordial state of the universe. However, the younger gods feared her power and desired to create order from chaos. Led by Marduk, the supreme god, the gods waged war against Tiamat.

In the ensuing battle, Marduk slew Tiamat, splitting her body in two. From her upper half, he created the heavens, and from her lower half, he created the earth. Tiamat's eyes became the sun and the moon, her mouth became the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, and her tears became the clouds and rain. Thus, Tiamat's body became the very substance of the universe.

The Rainbow Bridge: A Pathway to the Heavens

In Babylonian mythology, the Rainbow Bridge was believed to connect the earth to the heavens. It was a shimmering arch of colors that served as a way for the gods to travel between the earthly realm and the celestial abode. The rainbow was said to be created by the goddess Ishtar, who was associated with love, fertility, and war.

It was believed that the Rainbow Bridge was guarded by two divine creatures: Mushhushshu and Sirtush. Mushhushshu, a mythical serpent with the head of a dragon, was said to be the guardian of the eastern gate of the heavens. Sirrush, a winged lion-griffin, was the guardian of the western gate.

Those who wished to reach the heavens had to cross the Rainbow Bridge and pass the watchful gaze of these celestial guardians. The journey was not without its perils, as the bridge was also said to be home to demons and other malevolent spirits.

The Elemental Wizard: A Master of the Cosmic Forces

In Babylonian beliefs, the Elemental Wizard was a powerful figure who commanded the elemental forces of nature. This wizard was often depicted as being able to control the elements of fire, water, earth, and air. He was said to possess knowledge of ancient spells and incantations that allowed him to manipulate the natural world.

The Elemental Wizard played a significant role in Babylonian mythology as a mediator between the gods and the mortals. He was believed to be able to intercede on behalf of humans and to protect them from harm. In some stories, the Elemental Wizard is depicted as being a benevolent figure who used his powers to help those in need. However, in other tales, he is portrayed as being a sly and cunning manipulator who sought power and dominion over the elements.

New World Earth: A Vision of a Future Utopia

In the later Babylonian period, a new myth emerged that spoke of a future utopia called "New World Earth." This mythical land was described as a place of peace and abundance, where the inhabitants lived in harmony with nature and the gods.

New World Earth was said to be a place where the celestial dragons and other mythical creatures lived in peace. It was a land where the Rainbow Bridge was open to all, and where the Elemental Wizard used his powers to guide humanity towards a brighter future.

The myth of New World Earth became a source of hope and inspiration for the Babylonian people, especially during times of turmoil and change. It represented the belief in a better future and the possibility of a harmonious relationship between humanity, the gods, and the natural world.

The Babylonian dragons, the Rainbow Bridge, the Elemental Wizard, and the myth of New World Earth were integral parts of the ancient Babylonian cosmology. They represented the forces of nature, the celestial realm, and the potential for a future utopia. These beliefs provided the Babylonian people with a sense of meaning and purpose in a world that was often unpredictable and perilous.
